The Yorktown celebration was the big event of the year. On the 19th of October 1781, Lord Cornwallis's surrender virtually ended the war of the Revolution. The celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the surrender was also the time set to lay the cornerstone of the elegant monument to be erected to commemorate the event. President Arthur, Gen. Hancock and many other distinguished characters were present. The President made a short and appropriate speech upon being presented by Secretary Blaine. Nearly all of the states had troops in attendance and the review of the consolidated companies was truly magnificent. Kentucky was well represented, by four companies of State guards. Gov. Blackburn attended and rode at the head of the Kentucky troops in the procession. At the conclusion of the ceremonies a complimentary salute was fired to the British flag.
